Joe Jimpson Missed.

Joe Jimpson was a feller that was allus causin' strife;

He couldn't settle down in quietude to save his life.

The neighbors said he did no work, except a bossin' their.

He even gave advice about their family affairs.

"Twas 'everybody clear the road' when he would drive a dray,

He was so 'fraid a boss would balk, he made him run away.

An' yet he had his usefulness, because, beyond a doubt,

Without him there would never be so much to talk about.

But folks got tired of livin' in a tumult all the time.

They threatened and persuaded Joe to seek a foreign clime.

He started in earnest 'C'm, Jes' like he did with us.

An' we honestly felt lonesome, missin' all his noise an' fuss.

An' the greatest relaxation that we got from day to day,

Was talkin' 'bout the tidings from Joe Jimpson, far away.

An' finally Jim Perkins says (a-fetchin' out a sigh),

"I wisht that Joe'd come back!" An' we all answered, "So do I."

AMUSEMENT NOTES

The Philadelphia Telegraph says of Whitney's "The Isle of Bong-Bong," which comes to the Barre opera house tomorrow evening:

"When Charles A. Loder made his entrance on the stage of the grand opera house last night the audience became aware of the fact that in the role of Gordon St. Bernard, the manservant of Count Fitz von Hohenlohe, the German comedian had just one mission in life—to keep the risibilities working at full speed. In "The Isle of Bong-Bong," picturesquely produced by R. C. Whitney in two acts, and seen here for the first time, Will M. Hough and Frank R. Adams, the authors of the comedy, offer an opportunity for some original acting and singing, while the music by Joseph Howard is catchy and probably typical of the "isles" in the Philippines.

Georgina Campbell, as Paquita, the sultan's daughter; Frank H. LaRue, as the American; the ubiquitous widow enacted by Ferol Desmond, Lionel Hogarth as the count, and the rest of the cast worked out a plot not at all essential to the entertainment. A pretty bit of business, introduced in the second act, showed cowboys at a game of cards, when bang! off went a six-shooter, and murder was done. In a minute it was all over, and then it was musical comedy about 10 seconds to the mile. Singing, also, as now practiced, would have improved the records of the old-time champions from three to five seconds. Does anybody know what weight shoe Goldsmith Maid, which set the trotting record at 2:14 in the early '70s, wore on her front feet? Nobody does, for the simple reason that in those days it never occurred to trainers that the weight or pattern of the forward shoes made any difference in the speed of a trotter. Goldsmith Maid was "handy"—that is, she could make breaks when going at full speed and lose little or nothing by the operation. No attention was paid to the shoes other than to see they were good, substantial ones and fitted her feet. No one ever thought of seeing what they weighed, but long years after the mare had retired Doubt got to thinking of the Maid and her shoes. He had no samples of what she had worn in front, but one of her hind shoes remained, and on having it weighed he found it balanced the scales at exactly one pound. In the present day a 2:14 trotter of her size would be more apt to carry six ounces or less behind than 16.

A Satisfactory Performance.

A clean musical comedy, Hobart's "Coming Thro' the Rye," was presented at the Barre opera house last evening and the fair-sized audience was pleased.

Larger choruses have been heard here, but none better balanced. The solo parts were not so good, although particular mention is due Will H. Sloan for his hit in "Clancy," supported by a sextette of male voices. They were recalled again and again and each time were received with a broadside of approval. As a comedian Sloan was highclass. Miss Grace Turner, the "cowgirl," who came riding onto the stage astride "My Broncho Boy," and who sang a solo of that title, was good, while she gave a cute skit "Fiji" later. The girls were quite prettily attired, and the scenery in spots was excellent.

Eat More Candy

"Give children plenty of pure sugar, taffy and butterscotch and they'll have little need of cod-liver oil," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson in the Christmas Woman's Home Companion.

"In short, sugar is, after meat, bread and butter, easily next most important and necessary food. You can't eat a meal or a test very easily just leave off the pie, pudding or other desserts at your lunch or mid-day dinner. You'll be astonished to find how quickly you'll feel 'empty' again, and how unfinished the meal will seem. You can't get any working man to accept a dinner pail without pie in it. And he's absolutely right. The only thing that can take the place of sugar here is beer or wine. It is a significant fact that the free-lunch counters run in connection with bars furnish every imaginable thing except sweets. Even the restaurants and lunch grills attached to saloons or bars, yet where the service consists of any sort. They know their business! The more sugar and sweets a man takes at a meal, the less alcohol he wants. Conversely, nearly every drinking man will tell you that he has lost his taste for sweets. The more candy a nation consumes, the less alcohol they want."

"The United States government buys pure candy by the ton and ships it to the Philippines to be sold at cost to the soldiers in the canteens. All men crave it in the tropics, and the more they get of it, the less 'vino' and whiskey they want."

"In fine, the prejudice against sugar is born of puritanism and stinginess, equal parts. Whatever children cry for must be had for them, according to the pure doctrine of original sin; besides, it costs money. I know families in the rural districts, yet where the head of the family groans over every dollar's worth of sugar that comes into the house as a sinful and 'unwholesome' luxury."

BALANCING OF FAST HORSES.

Attention Must Be Paid Shoeing and Biting of Trotter and Pacer.

When the crowd sees a trotter or pacer do a mile in 2:10, the nag's gait must be about right, but while most people are aware of this fact a good many do not know that every trotter or pacer must be "balanced" before it can show anything like its real speed. Says the Springfield Republican, "Balance" in connection with harness means shoeing, biting, and checking in such fashion that when full speed is wanted the horse not only will be able to step up to that clip and maintain it in a true-going manner, but that, at the same time, the driver is enabled, by reason of the horse being in balance, to get along with practically no pull on the lines. In the days of Hiram Woodruff, says Henry T. Eyck White, any trotter that did not "take hold"—in other words, lag on the bit—was esteemed of little value as a racing tool, and in the light of modern developments in the art of balancing it is easy to see that the d'ctum, which to many now looks absurd, was based on solid fact. At that time absolutely nothing was known about balancing trotters by means of toe weights, for instance, nor was such a thing as a boot in existence, although in proportion to the total number trained there were as many horses then as now that went inside with one foot, carried their heads to one side, bugged on the bit, drove on one line, brushed their knees, and went up to their elbows.

With the single exception of the overhead check not one of the dozens of devices now necessities in a training stable was in existence. This meant that trotters had to be balanced on the bit, and today if the best trainer on earth takes a horse of 2:20 speed and starts to train him without a boot, toe weight, or modern bit or check, he will be balancing that nag on the bit inside of 30 days, and in order to keep the thing on a trot at top speed will have to take a hold on the lines that would put any trotter of 2:20 speed back about 10 seconds to the mile. Shoeing, also, as now practiced, would have improved the records of the old-time champions from three to five seconds. Does anybody know what weight shoe Goldsmith Maid, which set the trotting record at 2:14 in the early '70s, wore on her front feet? Nobody does, for the simple reason that in those days it never occurred to trainers that the weight or pattern of the forward shoes made any difference in the speed of a trotter. Goldsmith Maid was "handy"—that is, she could make breaks when going at full speed and lose little or nothing by the operation. No attention was paid to the shoes other than to see they were good, substantial ones and fitted her feet. No one ever thought of seeing what they weighed, but long years after the mare had retired Doubt got to thinking of the Maid and her shoes. He had no samples of what she had worn in front, but one of her hind shoes remained, and on having it weighed he found it balanced the scales at exactly one pound. In the present day a 2:14 trotter of her size would be more apt to carry six ounces or less behind than 16.

Typical Mabel.

When Mabel's at the telephone—She's generally loaded.

The others on the line must groan When Mabel's at the telephone—To desperation goaded.

But Mabel never seems to flinch; She knows that she has got a cinch.

When Mabel's at the telephone—You'd think she had imparted All that the girl had ever known, When Mabel's at the telephone.

But really she's just started There's nothing any one can do But wait with patience till she's through.

When Mabel's at the telephone—She shows great indignation: Her plaints would move a heart of stone When Mabel's at the telephone.

And hears a conversation. She'll ask them if they mean to stay And gable nonsense there all day.
